

THE MOUNTAINS OF THE WORLD

THE MOUNTAINS OF THE WORLD

The world is covered by a large area of mountains. The highest mountains are found in the Himalayas, the Andes, and the Alps. The mountains are formed by the collision of tectonic plates. The mountains are also formed by the erosion of the land. The mountains are also formed by the deposition of sediments. The mountains are also formed by the folding of the earth's crust. The mountains are also formed by the faulting of the earth's crust. The mountains are also formed by the volcanic activity. The mountains are also formed by the glacial activity. The mountains are also formed by the wind erosion. The mountains are also formed by the water erosion. The mountains are also formed by the ice erosion. The mountains are also formed by the wind deposition. The mountains are also formed by the water deposition. The mountains are also formed by the ice deposition. The mountains are also formed by the wind erosion. The mountains are also formed by the water erosion. The mountains are also formed by the ice erosion. The mountains are also formed by the wind deposition. The mountains are also formed by the water deposition. The mountains are also formed by the ice deposition.