

1. The diagram shows the structure of a human ovary. The ovary is divided into two main regions: the outer cortex and the inner medulla. The cortex contains the follicles at various stages of development, while the medulla contains the blood vessels and connective tissue.

Diagram illustrating the structure of a human ovary.

2. The diagram shows the structure of a human ovary. The ovary is divided into two main regions: the outer cortex and the inner medulla. The cortex contains the follicles at various stages of development, while the medulla contains the blood vessels and connective tissue.