

QUESTION 101

QUESTION 101: A network administrator is configuring a new network. The administrator wants to ensure that all devices on the network can communicate with each other. Which of the following is the most appropriate configuration for the network?

- A. A single network segment
 - B. A network with multiple segments connected by a central hub
 - C. A network with multiple segments connected by a central switch
 - D. A network with multiple segments connected by a central router
 - E. A network with multiple segments connected by a central firewall
- QUESTION 102: A network administrator is configuring a new network. The administrator wants to ensure that all devices on the network can communicate with each other. Which of the following is the most appropriate configuration for the network?
- A. A single network segment
 - B. A network with multiple segments connected by a central hub
 - C. A network with multiple segments connected by a central switch
 - D. A network with multiple segments connected by a central router
 - E. A network with multiple segments connected by a central firewall

QUESTION 103: A network administrator is configuring a new network. The administrator wants to ensure that all devices on the network can communicate with each other. Which of the following is the most appropriate configuration for the network?