

QUESTION 101

QUESTION 101: A network administrator is configuring a new network. The administrator wants to ensure that all devices on the network can communicate with each other. Which of the following is the most appropriate configuration for the network?

- A. A single broadcast domain
  - B. A single collision domain
  - C. Multiple broadcast domains
  - D. Multiple collision domains
- QUESTION 102: A network administrator is configuring a new network. The administrator wants to ensure that all devices on the network can communicate with each other. Which of the following is the most appropriate configuration for the network?
- A. A single broadcast domain
  - B. A single collision domain
  - C. Multiple broadcast domains
  - D. Multiple collision domains
- QUESTION 103: A network administrator is configuring a new network. The administrator wants to ensure that all devices on the network can communicate with each other. Which of the following is the most appropriate configuration for the network?
- A. A single broadcast domain
  - B. A single collision domain
  - C. Multiple broadcast domains
  - D. Multiple collision domains

QUESTION 104: A network administrator is configuring a new network. The administrator wants to ensure that all devices on the network can communicate with each other. Which of the following is the most appropriate configuration for the network?