

RESEARCH AND EVALUATION

The research and evaluation phase of the design process involves gathering information about the user and the context of use, and evaluating the design against user requirements and usability goals.

The research and evaluation phase of the design process involves gathering information about the user and the context of use, and evaluating the design against user requirements and usability goals.

The research and evaluation phase of the design process involves gathering information about the user and the context of use, and evaluating the design against user requirements and usability goals.

The research and evaluation phase of the design process involves gathering information about the user and the context of use, and evaluating the design against user requirements and usability goals.

The research and evaluation phase of the design process involves gathering information about the user and the context of use, and evaluating the design against user requirements and usability goals.

The research and evaluation phase of the design process involves gathering information about the user and the context of use, and evaluating the design against user requirements and usability goals.

The research and evaluation phase of the design process involves gathering information about the user and the context of use, and evaluating the design against user requirements and usability goals.

The research and evaluation phase of the design process involves gathering information about the user and the context of use, and evaluating the design against user requirements and usability goals.

